THE
House that Jack Built,
A NEW GAME
OF Questions & Commands.

London:

PRINTED FOR E. WALLIS, 42, SKINNER STREET; AND
J. WALLIS, MARINE LIBRARY, SIDMOUTH.

DIRECTIONS

For playing the entertaining Game of "The House that Jack Built."

A TREASURER must first be chosen, who is to play, subject to the same forfeits as the rest of the Company.—The Treasurer begins the Game, by producing a thimble, a ball, or any other small article, which he gives to the person next him, with his COMMAND, "Take this." The person who receives it, asks, "What's this?" The first answers, "This is Jack."—The second person then passes it to the third, saying the same; and so through the Company, till it comes to the first again, who, on passing it each time, adds a new division of the Game; thus:—"Take this."—"What's this?"—"This is the House that Jack built."—Every one who makes a mistake in repeating, is to be fined by the Treasurer. After all the Game is gone through, a Crier must be chosen, who, being blindfolded, is to lay his or her hand in the Treasurer's lap; the Treasurer is then to produce the forfeits, one by one, saying aloud, "What shall the person do, who owns this pretty thing?"—when the Crier is to name any punishment he pleases, such as "Sing a song to the Company,"—"Hop three times round the room, &c." And this must be performed by each, under the penalty of kissing the company all round, and begging the favour to be excused.
